Overview

Many unknown factors can interfere with a child's natural growth. It might be genetics or other obstacles that prevent normal development. With improved observation, practical knowledge and the ability to follow the level of a child, parents and teachers can transform the lives of everyone involved.

Content

This workshop will:

- Present an overview of common characteristics of behavioral, learning, and physical exceptionalities that we are seeing children come to school with these days
- Identify issues that are causing stress in the child's environment
- Offer some strategies for special support that the child with exceptionalities may require

This workshop has at its base a respect for the expertise of the attending Montessori teachers. We will build upon their existing passion to help and include ALL children in their classroom.

This requires a commitment to creating caring communities, increasing awareness of the child's strengths, and supporting the rights of children to develop to their best potential and preserve their inner life.
